Commissioner Jon Hensler did wish to make an official response to the citizens’ comments regarding permissive license plate tax public hearings. In reference to the people who were unsure why the commissioners were not present for the public hearings, Commissioner Hensler stated that this particular issue isn’t a new issue, stating the Engineer has been presenting the data and coming to the Commission for years regarding these permissive fees. He said that Engineer Miller, as well as other county office holders use the Commissioner’s office to host these types of hearings/meetings “because it is a known public office space”. However, those meetings are held for the benefit of the public, not for the benefit of the commission, although they are well aware of the information. “We did not purposefully avoid attending the hearings as to not hear any feedback from the public, and are accessible and available”. In order to avoid any future confusion regarding the Commissioner’s involvement with these types of hearings, Commissioner Hensler said the commissioner’s office would no longer be used to host them. Instead, he says officeholders will be asked to host these gatherings at their own offices or in another public place. Commissioner Hensler added “We recognize that now, in this economy, things are not good. Looking down the road, what we have determined at this point is that we very well may be losing out on future opportunities by way of grants and investments in our communities because we are not willing to ask our people to pay less than $1.70 per month in a permissive fee.($20.00 per year). While things are bad, I have a hard time thinking this $1.70 a month is going to make or break people.” Grant applications from the state are beginning to specifically ask if permissive fees have been enacted, and those entities that have enacted the fees receive additional favorable points. Commissioner Hensler stated that every winter the Commissioner’s office is plagued with complaints of holes in roads and busted tires, and Engineer Miller has pledged 100% of this money, if/when it comes to fruition, to paving roads.
